Peter Hallward – Singularising or Relational and Specific

By Shomit Sirohi

I. Singularising discourse – on Postcolonialism and anti-colonialism – what then is singularizing

What then is singularizing – to follow post-colonial process which is about heterogeneity, diaspora, and even processes of the Other and then there is anti-colonailism which is about the same, similar, history, and even class struggle of the people and the opposite – which then is its internal symmetry which is the revolution or diaspora postmodernism which then is actually another symmetry the One of capitalist style and the Other of class struggle, protests, democracy and race matters which is joined in the process which though is a process of the internal symmetry again – till in fact there is a relational and specific version of that as well.

II. A Reading of Eduardo Galeano instead – Loving this, Holderlin path, that Cornel West is calling it.

Instead the process becomes singularizing the One of forces joined, and class struggle and protests joined but with a daily life excess of utopian daily life not in standard alienated Soviet formats either but in true infinity –something like Paul who walked to Damascus everyday to find infinity in the exercise of reading the Bible but also in fact as also goes – to help the people, but also oneself – such a strict one and multipe then is with that excess called Christ. In detective fiction then – who is Christ and who more truly.
